

HOME AS A HEALING PLACE

A low-maintenance, energy efficient house is exactly what this busy lady needed

WRITTEN BY PAUL STENQUIST

PHOTOGRAPHY BY MITCH GREEN

BUILT BY REGATTA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Kimberly Hightower cares. She's a hospice nurse in Central Texas; so much of her time is spent making others feel better during their last days. But few vocations are as emotionally taxing as hers, so spiritual and physical rejuvenation is crucial. The beautiful home pictured on these pages is where she goes to repair her psyche at the end of the day.

Kimberly's home is no ordinary house. As we said, Kimberly cares; so it was important that her new home be as energy efficient as possible, thereby minimizing both the quantity of fossil fuels required for its operation and its carbon footprint.

The home is part of a patio-home enclave of eight houses developed by Regatta Development Corp., an enterprise owned by Kimberly's father, Jim Hightower.

"As a very busy professional, Kimberly fit right into our target market for these homes," Jim said. "The grounds are common property that are maintained by the association, so